"Now, do not misunderstand me. I do not mind paying ball players high salaries, and I am discussing this question from a business man's standpoint. For instance, we pay Frank Baker lots of money, but he is worth every penny he gets. I would not pay him less. His ability to win games and his power as a drawing card make him a valuable agent. He is worth the money as a as a drawing card make him a valuable asset. He is worth the money as a business proposition. But there are a great many players who have not earned anything like the amount of money they received. I do not blame them exactly, as they get as high salaries as possible. But I repeat, the business cannot afford it.

Questions & Answers

By TOM MAC NULTY

Dear Tom—I noticed in your column recently where some one had asked you the question as to whether the Brooklyn club ever made 5 runs in the first inning in a same with Cincianati, and wherein you answered "No." It is my recollection, when the Brooklyn and Cincianati clubs were members of the old American Association back in the early '80s. I witnessed one Sunday afternoon a game between these two clubs, wherein the runs in the first inning totalled 18, but my recollection is not clear as to whether Brooklyn of Cincianati had the greater number. A reference to the records will prove this.

In 1889 Brooklyn best Cincinnati Syracuse defeated Ohio University which is not Ohio State.
